

1 Manus Connector and Application Integration Research

1.1 Complete inventory, connection methods, costs, permissions, and practical limitations

Prepared by Manus AI | Snapshot date: 11 September 2026 | User timezone: GMT+3

1.2 Executive summary

The current Manus session exposes 390 connector records. These records include remote MCP connectors, direct API connectors, built-in integrations, and command-based MCP transports. The inventory is broader than the short public examples in Manus documentation, so this report treats the session inventory as the complete dated catalog for this task. It preserves separate records when one provider appears in multiple modes, such as an MCP connector and an API connector.

Manus functions as an orchestration layer rather than replacing the connected services. A connector can give Manus access to authorized data and actions, but the actual capabilities are determined by the provider’s scopes, token, workspace, plan, API quota, and the specific tools exposed by its MCP server. Manus usage charges and third-party subscription or API charges are separate. No provider price is presented as a fact unless it is verified from that provider’s current official pricing page; for the full inventory, the safe procurement rule is to open the provider pricing and API pages before enabling a connector.

Scope warning. A complete catalog of 390 records can be exhaustive in coverage without claiming that every provider has identical permissions or pricing. Provider-specific permissions are therefore labeled as requiring review where the available Manus documentation does not publish a full scope matrix.

1.3 How Manus connections work

Manus documentation describes four important patterns. Prebuilt MCP connectors normally use OAuth, although some require a personal API token. Built-in connectors are managed through Manus’s account authorization flow. Direct API connectors use provider credentials and inherit the provider’s API quotas and billing. Custom MCP servers and Zapier extend coverage beyond the built-in catalog. After authorization, connectors can be selected for a task; the Manus API accepts connector UUIDs and supports multiple connectors in one task. 1 2 3

Connection type	What it means	Main cost or risk to check
Built-in	Native Manus integration with provider-specific account authorization.	Account scopes, workspace selection, and whether actions are read-only or write-enabled.

Command MCP	MCP server uses a command or local runtime.	Runtime trust, secret storage, package provenance, and exposed commands.

1.4 Detailed verified profiles

1.4.1 Airtable

Structured database and workflow platform; Manus can query, analyze, and update authorized bases using a Personal Access Token. Connection model: Remote MCP, usually OAuth or provider-specific token; review requested scopes. Airtable is the clearest example of fine-grained control: its Personal Access Token can be limited by base and scope. The documented scopes include record read/write, schema read/write, comments read/write, workspace/base listing, and webhook management. Manus's article states that it cannot delete Airtable records. ⁴

1.4.2 Anthropic

Anthropic API access; model availability, quotas, and charges are governed by Anthropic terms and billing. Connection model: Provider API key or token; verify scopes, quota, and billing. 1.5 Complete connector inventory

The following table covers every connector record in the dated session inventory. The type column is the authoritative connection-mode classification returned by Manus. The capability summary is intentionally conservative: it describes the integration family without inventing undocumented permissions.

#	Application / connector	Type	Category	Conservative capability summary	Connection and pricing check
389	tl;dv	mcp/stdio	Productivity, collaboration & communications	MCP connector using a local/command-based transport. Available tools and permissions are provider-specific and should be reviewed before authorization.	MCP command/local transport; review credential handling and exposed tools. Third-party pricing varies; verify provider terms.
390	vidIQ	mcp/http	Marketing, advertising & analytics	MCP connector using a remote server. Manus can use the server's exposed tools within the permissions granted by the provider; exact read/write scope is provider-specific.	Remote MCP, usually OAuth or provider-specific token; review requested scopes. Third-party pricing varies; verify provider terms.

1.6 Pricing and charging guide

There are three separate billing layers. First, Manus may charge credits or plan usage for the task itself. Second, the connected provider may charge a subscription, seat, transaction fee, API request fee, token fee, rendering credit, or data license. Third, an automation intermediary such as Zapier or Make may charge its own task or operation quota. Connecting an app does not imply that its service is free, and a provider's free tier may still impose rate limits or restrict commercial use. Manus’s own plans and credit system should be checked in the current official plans documentation. 5

Situation	What may be charged	Recommended control
Read-only research	Manus task usage plus possible provider API/data usage.	Use read-only scopes and set provider spending limits.
Write-back automation	Manus task usage plus provider API/operation usage.	Require confirmation before updates, especially for CRM, finance, email, and publishing actions.
AI generation	Manus task usage plus model/provider tokens or credits.	Pin an approved model, monitor quotas, and review retention terms.
Media generation	Manus task usage plus image, video, voice, or rendering credits.	Set resolution, duration, and monthly budget limits.
Automation bridge	Manus usage plus Zapier/Make/n8n operations and target-app charges.	Track each platform’s task/operation quota separately.

1.7 Security and permission checklist

Before connecting any application, confirm the account or workspace, the exact scopes requested, whether the connector can write or delete, the provider’s data-retention policy, the location where credentials are stored, and the process for revoking access. For APIs, use a dedicated key with the smallest possible scopes and a rotation schedule. For financial, email, social, and production infrastructure connectors, test on a limited account first. Manus states that users can review and revoke access, and that shared sessions redact connector outputs and API keys, but users should still avoid sharing sensitive output in prompts or documents. 1.8 Practical conclusions

The highest-value use of the catalog is multi-application orchestration: research in one system, analysis in Manus, and controlled write-back to another. Airtable, Notion, Google Workspace, GitHub, Slack, HubSpot, Stripe, and the AI-provider connectors are particularly flexible, but they also carry the greatest permission and cost-management responsibility. For a first deployment, enable one read-only connector, test a small workflow, inspect the result, and only then add write scopes or additional connectors.
